Patio Roofs

Not your grandmother's patio cover anymore, new technology makes these insulated patio roofs cool and shady because the thick insulation stops the heat of the sun from radiating through the roof like many other materials. Optional column types and trim packages add appeal to your home. A solid roof with built-in gutter and downspouts will provide a refuge from overhead precipitation year round.

Stationary & Operable Pergolas

Temo pergolas offer shade and beauty to your home. Temo's stationary pergola provides 67% shade while the operable pergola allows you full shade or sky views at the push of a button. You'll have more room to maneuver under your pergola because the strong extruded aluminum construction allows large spans between support columns so you won't be crowded or have your view blocked due to extra posts.

What to consider when buying a stationary or operable pergola...

The reliability and value of any pergola is determined by how much shade you desire, and the appearance and durability of the material. Overhead shade is determined by solid material versus space across the rafters; just make sure you get the amount of shade you expect. Most pergolas look great when new, take time to consider your past experience with similar materials.

After exposure to weather, have wooden areas on your home required maintenance? How has plastic or vinyl lasted outdoors? Can you think of a material that lasts and lasts with virtually no maintenance?

All TEMO Pergolas Provide:

What to consider when buying a retractable awning...

The reliability and ease of using a retractable awning is determined by the strength of the frame along with fabric quality. As you can imagine, the frame must be able to endure multiple cycles of extending out over the space you want to shade and then retracting back into its original position. Frame strength is determined by design, thickness of the metal parts, and most importantly by the cable system operating inside the frame, that allows your awning to resist winds and endure the in-and-out cycles.

The awning fabric provides the other leg of durability. Because of the constant exposure to all kinds of weather, the thickness, fabric density, stitching, and the coloring process will be the main factors in the longevity of your awning fabric.

- Two models with 4-cable operating system
- Lifetime frame warranty

Retractable Screens

Who knew? This hidden screen system has been a secret for too long. If the sun reaches your patio from a low angle rather than overhead, a Sunesta Sentry retractable screen is the answer. A motorized screen is contained in an aluminum cassette with “captured ends” holding the sides of the screen tight to prevent blowing in the wind. Choose different screen densities and colors to match your needs.
